

How much does a Bhutanese micro-module cost approximately

Article Overview

A Bhutanese micro-module, such as a small micro-modular data center or solar module, typically costs between $10,000 and $50,000 USD, depending on size, power capacity, and logistics.

Cost Factors

Micro-Modular Data Centers: Micro-modular data centers are compact, pre-built units that include servers, power backup, cooling, and monitoring. Costs vary based on power capacity (3-20 kVA), cabinet size (18U-31U), and cooling type. For example, a small 3 kVA, 18U unit with top-mounted AC is the most affordable, while larger units for healthcare or enterprise use can cost significantly more. Prefabrication reduces construction costs by about 30% and deployment time by 90%, but the base price still ranges from $10,000 to $50,000 USD depending on specifications and vendor choices (SOETECK) . Solar Micro-Modules in Bhutan: For solar micro-modules, the cost is influenced by import logistics. Bhutan imports most raw materials from India and East/Southeast Asia, with transport from Kolkata to Phuentsholing taking 3-5 days. Additional costs include inland haulage, customs brokerage, insurance, and buffer stock. High-quality packaging is essential to prevent damage during transit. These factors can add 10-20% to the base module cost, making the final price for a Bhutanese solar micro-module roughly $12,000-$55,000 USD depending on size and transport complexity .
