

Huijue Switch Fiber Optic and Ethernet Ports

Article Overview

Huijue switches combine fiber optic and Ethernet ports to enable high-speed, long-distance, and local network connectivity.

Port Types and Functionality

Huijue switches are designed to support both fiber optic ports and Ethernet (UTP) ports, allowing seamless integration between fiber and copper networks. The fiber ports enable long-distance data transmission, ideal for connecting remote locations or extending network coverage, while the Ethernet ports provide local connectivity for standard devices using UTP cables. Many Huijue switches function as fiber media converters, bridging signals between fiber optic cables and traditional Ethernet networks.

Supported Speeds and Standards

Huijue switches typically support Gigabit Ethernet speeds, including 10/100/1000 Mbps, and are compatible with IEEE standards such as 802.3 (10Base-T), 802.3u (100Base-TX), 802.3ab (1000Base-T), and 802.3z (1000Base-FX). This ensures reliable high-speed performance and low latency for both fiber and Ethernet connections.
