

Router Fiber Optic and Broadband Red Lights

Article Overview

A red light on your fiber optic router or broadband device usually indicates a critical problem such as loss of signal, no internet connection, or hardware malfunction.

What Red Lights Mean

- LOS (Loss of Signal) Red Light: On fiber routers or ONTs, a blinking or solid red LOS light indicates that the optical signal from your ISP is missing, weak, or interrupted. This prevents your router from communicating with the ISP, causing internet outages .
- Broadband Red Light: A solid red broadband light typically signals that the router or modem is not receiving a proper internet signal. This could be due to a faulty device, loose cables, or ISP issues .
- Router Red Light: On general routers, a red light often points to critical errors, no internet connection, or hardware failures. It may also indicate configuration errors, overheating, or ISP-imposed restrictions .

Common Causes

- ISP Outage or Maintenance: Service interruptions from your provider can trigger red lights on both fiber and broadband devices .
- Loose or Damaged Cables: Fiber patch cords or Ethernet cables that are disconnected, bent, or damaged can cause signal loss .
- Router or ONT Malfunction: Hardware failures or firmware issues may prevent the device from establishing a connection
