

Small busbar terminal company

Article Overview

Littelfuse, SCHERDEL, and Eaton are notable companies offering small-scale or specialized busbar terminal solutions.

Key Companies and Offerings

Littelfuse, Inc. specializes in automotive and industrial busbars and terminal blocks, providing screw, stud, and barrier strip terminals. Their products are suitable for small to medium-scale applications, including trucks, buses, construction, and agricultural equipment. They also offer 3D models for design integration, making them ideal for prototyping and low-volume production . SCHERDEL focuses on flexible busbars, particularly for automotive and e-mobility applications. They provide small-quantity production with custom engineering, simulation, and in-house prototyping. Their multilayer copper busbars offer high flexibility and precise contact surfaces, ensuring reliable current transmission even in compact or vibration-prone assemblies . Eaton manufactures both rigid and flexible busbars with integrated terminal solutions like the HPLB (High-Power Lock Box), which eliminates loose fasteners and provides self-aligning, quick-connect terminals. Eaton supports low-volume production and prototyping, making them suitable for specialized or small-scale projects . TE Connectivity offers a wide range of busbar and terminal products, from standard solutions to custom designs, suitable for small-scale applications where reliability and cost-effectiveness are important .
