

The adhesive on the back of the distribution box won't stick

Article Overview

Adhesive failure is often caused by surface contamination, improper temperature, or degraded adhesive, and can usually be fixed by cleaning, warming, or replacing the adhesive.

Common Causes

1. Surface Contamination: Dust, dirt, oils, or moisture on the back of the distribution box can prevent the adhesive from bonding properly. Even small amounts of manufacturing residue or warehouse dust can create a barrier between the adhesive and the surface . 2. Temperature Issues: Adhesives are sensitive to temperature. If the box or adhesive is too cold, the adhesive may stiffen and fail to stick. Conversely, excessive heat can dry out or degrade the adhesive, reducing its tackiness . 3. Adhesive Degradation: Over time, adhesives can lose their chemical bonding properties due to age, exposure to air, or heat, making them less effective . 4. Inadequate Pressure or Compression: Some adhesives, especially hot melt types, require sufficient pressure to bond properly. Insufficient compression can prevent the adhesive from penetrating the surface and forming a strong bond . 5. Incompatibility with Surface: Certain coatings, glossy finishes, or recycled materials may reduce adhesion. The adhesive may not be formulated for the specific material of the box .

Solutions

1. Clean the Surface: Wipe the back of the box with a dry or slightly damp cloth to r...
