AT&T has the absolute lowest internet price for Los Angeles low income residents, thanks to their subsidized AT&T Accessplan. They offer 10 Mbps internet for only $10 per month with no contract and a free WiFi router lease included. You must already participate in a qualifying public assistance program like SNAP to access the plan. Otherwise, they offer general consumer plans starting in the $55-180 range with speeds up to 5,000 Mbps. Fiber internet is the fastest consumer internet option on the market, and enables download and upload speeds up to 5,000 Mbps. For context, that's 25 times faster than the average cable plan in Los Angeles and almost 150 times the fastest cable company upload speed. As of 2024, the 2,000-5,000 speed tier is only offered by AT&T Fiber, thanks to a I. Cable internet is the second-fastest home internet option. In LA, cable download speeds range from 300-1,000 Mbps. However, the upload speed of cable is lower than fiber; it caps out at 35 Mbps and is sufficient for Zoom calls but struggles when moving large files or uploading video. Cable internet from Spectrum (formerly called Time Warner Cable). DSL internet is a widely-available fallback option for internet service in Los Angeles, but for most loc...
